My Dear friends and creative thinkers,

We're wiser only in diversity (2)

We are a melting pot of minds craving enrichment.

Is what I see and experience real? Why did the gamut of life begin? No one can expressly claim to know the answer to this riddle. It is postulated by philosophical thinkers that there was pure potential, call it existence or infinity, replete with intelligence, a state that is not possible to describe because it has never been seen. There was no seer, only Nature in pure unadulterated nothingness; it cannot be called a state because it would have been beyond description – there was no mind or language to give it a meaning. Any description of it would only be fiction.

It is impossible to solve the riddle of life without any postulation or supposition, the beginning of plausible reasoning. To get to the root of the beginning of all, we have to fully know and understand our present state and then reverse engineer from that in an attempt to get to what it would possibly have been at the start of life.

Maybe, for life to have taken form Nature must have had an awakening of the awareness of Its being and then an impulse to know Itself. Who am I? But how could It know Itself if there was nothing to see Itself against? To know itself Nature then must have splintered itself into smithereens which became the well-ordered cosmos and thus came all matter, energy, and space embracing the entire solar system, the galaxies, and everything between the galaxies. The entire gamut is nothing but a well-orchestrated system, an assortment, charged with electricity, magnetism, an array of rays, and dynamic radiations as a collective intelligent source of all living organisms and all else that exists on the Planet Earth (and elsewhere?). Every single minutest bit of the entire diverse orchestration has a presence of Nature in it, and thus Nature is able to know who it is by being the overarching observer of Itself in All.

So, diversity is not by accident but an intentioned action of the creative Nature. I can only know and understand myself by reference to and in the light of another. In diversity, we get a true measure of ourselves and a good reason to be grateful for all we see and experience, good or not so good, and eke out inner harmony.

Espousing our differences and extolling our common virtues - these are the key lessons learned from understanding and embracing diversity. What you look like and where you come from matters less when you stand before me and tell me who I am.

Be Blessed
